McElhiney to resign

By a Jurdan Times Staff Reporter AMMAN, Feb. 20-Commissioner General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Patestine refugees (UNRWA)

Thomas McElhiney has been relieved of his post effective April 1. according to an informed source at U.N. Headquarters in New

Yurk. The source said U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim nsked Mr. McEthines in resign. No details were given on the reasons for the action although the Arab states have strongly objected to the relocation of UNRWA headquarters from Beirul to Vienna. The move also comes at a time when Mr. McElhiney is having difficulties in resolving a strike by UNRWA employees. The workers are protesting the implementation of a wage compatibility study designed to reduce UNRWA sularies to the level of local civil service wages. The UNRWA employees want standard U.N.

salaries. They are also protesting against reductions of UNRWA rations for Palestinian refugees. They have also asked for cancellation of deductions from their salaries of two days wages meant to compensate for their hrief work stoppage. Sources here confirmed that McElhiney will be leaving his post soon. Mr.

McElhiney arrived here today from Vienna for a three day visit to Jurdan. He said that he will meet with UNKWA directors in the region to discuss problems and activities. Mr. McElhines said that

UNRWA has a projected deficit for 1979 of $38 million, UNRWA anticipates spending $162 million this year but it has only $124 million. If international funding can't be acquired, 538 million in services must be cut. The must likely candidate to succeed Mr.

McElhiney as commissioner general is Alan Brown, the deputy commissioner general. Mr. Brown currently leads UNRWA's team in the negotiations with UNRWA employees in Vienna and is said to hold positive and understanding views with regard to the

According to U.S. defence officials, President Anwar Sadat told Mr. Brown last Saturday that Egypt ought to be receiving weapons on the same level as Israel.

The Israelis already have U.S. approval to buy 75 F-16's while Egypt has been authorised purchases of only 50 of the less sophisticated F-5,

The Egyptian request was the largest weapons purchase list handed to Mr. Brown during a Itl-day, four-country trip which also took him to Saudi Arabia. Jordan and Israel,

Mr. Brown, who returned to Washington last night, said his talks had laid the basis for future high-level security consultations between the United States and each of the four countries. Any sales will be approved later.

President Carter today called on Egypt and Israel to end differences over the terms for a peace. treaty when their foreign ministers opened new talks at the Camp David presidential retreat in Maryland tomorrow.

The Egyptian-Israeli negotiarions became stalemated soon after the Camp David summit held by President Carter with President Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menachem Begin last September.

Mr. Carter reiterated that he would call another Middle East summit if necessary and if the two Middle East leaders showed enough flexibility.

and peanuis. He said the pipes had been laid before Israeli troops swept down to the east bank of Suez in the 196" war, halting all development projects.

The olive grove maughrated by Mr. Sadat offered a welcome patch of green in an otherwise vast, empty wasteland.

Split in Iran's revolution bursts into open

Army purge continues. U.S. closes consulates

TEHRAN, Feb. 20 (R)-A split in Iran's revolutionary movement burst into the open today when religious leader Ayatullah Ruholiah Khomeini denounced leftist urban guerrillas and their supporters as "anti-Islamic opportunists."

But a purge of momenths) army officers cominaced and four more pro-Shali generals were executed,

These people are not Moslems and are against Islam," he said in a radio and television broadcast of the lettist guernilas who only a week ago spearheaded the buttle against the Shah's troops.

The four officers, including the former Head of Military Intellicence, Maj. Gen. Parveez Amin Afshar, were executed after secret trial and conviction by an Islamic revolutionary court, the national radio announced.

The radio gave no details, nor did it say how the executions were carried out.

"The purge of the armed lorces will continue," Iran's new Chief of Staff, Maj.-Gen. Mohammad Vali Gharani, said after the executions were announced.

Eight monarchist generals have now been executed since the revolution which swept Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to power last week. The first four were machine-gunned last Thursday on the reof of the Avatollah's milliary headquarters.

Gen. Gharant told a press conference there was still unrest in the military.

Gen. Gharani was apparently referring to agitation from the left which strongly criticised his appointment.

He said the purge in the militia would continue but added that, if the armed forces were weakened, Iran's independence and territorial integrity would be endangered.

The official Pars News Agency repuried intense shooting in the northwestern city of Tahriz last night between "revolutionary soldiers and anti-revolutionary forces." Over 700 people are reported to have been killed in Tabriz in fighting that flared last week after the Shah's regime was toppled.

Pars said the situation in Tabriz, capital of East Azerbaijan province on the Soviet border, was calm today after the arrest of "a large group of saboteers and counter-revolutionaries."

The new rulers have already arrested, dismissed or retired most of the top echelon of the 500,000-strong armed forces which the Shah built into the biggest and best-equipped in the Middle East.

Faced with mounting apposition from armed leftist groups and the apparent resurcence of the separatist problem in the tribal border areas, Geo. Gharani todav admitted that a large number of soldiers were still absent from their units.

He told the press conference that only 50 per cent of deserters. in the provinces had reported back. to barracks so far. Ayatollah Khomeini has personally ordered all soldiers to report back for duty. The serious undermining of the armed forces comes to light at a time when the government has had to send a special mission to the volatile Kurdish region tollowing reports of separatist unrest. Foreign Minister Karim Sanjahi, who belongs to a prominent Kurdish family, sent a message to the Kurds warning them against 'armed elements' trying to usset nat., nal unity. Gea. Gharani indicated the

The spokesman said they appeared before an investigating magistrate yesterday, where they made a plea which was not made public. The magistrate, who will conduct a formal inquiry, remanded them in custody and the two were taken to jail pending their trial, which would probably take place in April, the spokesman said.

Carter warns Kremlin

in Iran imperils ties with U.S. Interference the needs of the pont and elderly, but added

ATLANTA, Georgia, Feb. 20 (AP)--President Carter offered his first broad defense of a U.S.-Soviet arms treaty today but warned the Kremlin that interference in Iran could jeopardise Russian relations with the United States. He declared that the nearly completed pact is "a fundamental element of strategic and political stability in a turbulent world."

Delivering a major speech outlining his administration's foreign policy at the midpoint of his term, President Carter also revealed that, as a result of the Chinese invasinn of Vietnam, the United States has "consulted directly with leaders around the world."

Reporters were led to believe the contacts may have been with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping of China.

The president made his comments in a speech prepared for delivery at Georgia Institute of Technology, after he spoke to the Georgia House and Senate and defended his anti-inflation programme and "austere" budget proposal.

He said the nation must continue to meet

"there is a clear limit on the ability of the American people to pay higher and higher taxes to finance new programmes."

Speaking on the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, which has been under negotiation for more than six years by three administrations, he said agreement "has been reached on most of the major components of a sound and verifiable...treaty."

Asked whether this meant the treaty had finally been completed, White House Press Secretary Indy Powell said, "We're still not therefet. There are still some details, some important details, to be worked out."

Mr. Carter said he would not let competition between Washington and Moscow "overwhelm possibilities for cooperation." But, in comments clearly meant for the Kremlin, he said interference in Iran by other nations "will have serious consequences and will affect our broader relationship with them."

Mr. Carter also revealed he will consult with Congress on additional military assistance for Asian allies "to stand by our friends and help meet their security needs." Mr. Powell, without offering any details. said this aid would go to Singapore. Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and the Philinpines, the members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Summing up what he called the nation's role and purpose in a world of change and turbulence, President Carter said: "We provide the bedrock of global security and economic advance in a world of anprecedented change and conflict."

Aides have spent considerable time recently defending what one called Carter's "careful, thoughtful approach" in foreign policy, under attack in Congress.

Mr. Carter took up the challenge today. referring to the assault on the U.S. embassy in Tehran last Wednesday and stating: "Those who argue that the United States should or could intervene directly to thwart these events (in Iran) are wrong about the realities of Iran. So, too, are those who spout propaganda that protecting nur own citizens is tantamount to direct interThe sudden disruption of relations between !raft and Israel, following the revolution of Avatotian Rubollah Khomeini, has left franians in israel in the dark. A timely warning

NOTHING COULD be timelier than Jordan's fresh warning to the world community on Monday about Israel's aggressive actions in the occupied Arab territories. Coming as it does on the eve of the renewed Egyptian-Israeli talks at Camp David, the Jordanian statement serves three useful purposes: it reminds the world that Israel has been stepping up its provocations in the occupied lands even while the Camp David process has been playing itself out; it demonstrates once again Jordan's firm resolve not to be pressured into yielding to appeals, particularly from Washington, that this country should somehow abandon all its sacred principles and take a role in the Camp David tragicomedy: and it underscores His Majesty King Hussein's wise suggestion that an alternative approach to Middle East peace must be sought through a multi-party formula involving the United Nations.

Israel's provocations have recently reached the level of the intolerable. The state-run radio recently confirmed what we reported months ago: that a government committee in Israel has been formulating plans for sharply limiting the definition of any plan for Palestinian "selfrule" that might emerge from Camp David: the aims are to ensure that an actual Palestinian state is never created, that Jewish settlement can continue unhindered, that the expansion of the Arab population is sharply curtailed, and that the "self-rule" authorities are totally emasculated. Accompanying the exposure of this outrageous "autonomy" plan have come General Ariel Sharon's fatuous plans for a future "metropolitan Jerusalem" with a Jewish population of one million.

It is almost as if Israel, already increasingly isolated by the events in Iran and by the new Iranian government's welcome commitment to the Arab cause, deliberately hopes to scuttle the treaty talks with Egypt. The Egyptian side, to its credit--and no doubt sensing Israel's discomfiture--is sticking to a hard line on linking the treaty with real progress on the Palestinian issue. This now looks like an empty prospect; neither side seems to expect much progress from Camp David Two, and both appear to be looking to the U.S. for a fresh initiative, Soon, then, we may be rid of the flimsy Camp David apparatus altogether. The danger is, with the Iranian aftermath, that Israel now thinks it has a strong card to play with Washington in appealing for more American protection. We hope that U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown picked up enough signals on his recent swing through the Middle East to point to the dangers of such a course.

For our part, meanwhile, we have more justification than ever for staying out of the whole sordid Camp David affair: the initiative rests more and more with Arab interests, and we appear to have a strong new element, the Iranian element, on our side.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

Under the heading "A Travesty of Negotiations" AL RA'I Tuesday editorially says that resumption of the Egyptian-Israeli hilateral talks is a most painful thing to Arab feelings in the present stage as if nothing was happening in the Middle East scene. This intended disregard is being translated by Israel into a fierce settlement onslaught, expulsion of Arab inhabitants, confiscation of Arab property and arrest of Arab religious leaders.

The Israelis, the newspaper adds, appear to be trying to stop the "wheel of history and impose on it their own will aided by the force of American arms.

On the other hand there is the Egyptian side's headlong dashing towards signing a unilateral agreement in a precipitous endeavour to play its role in the area side by side with Israel against wishes of the Arab nation and aspirations of the Palestinian people, Al Ra'i says.

It says Jordan's new movement, announced by Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Hassan Ibrahim, is meant to awaken the world conscience and prod the Arabs to enlist all their energies and potentialities to face the Zionist challenges and violations in the Arab occupied areas that are pushing the area, step by step, towards ruin and destruction.

Under the heading "The Camp David Road is Impassable" AL DUSTOUR says a snow storm blowing on the eastern parts of the United States has blocked the road to Camp David, making it extremely dangerous to reach there.

However, the road to Camp David was shut before it was closed with snow; and it may not become passable for any just and comprehensive settlement to pass through "because Israeli intentions are impeneirable".

With the Egyptian and Israeli viewpoints perplexingly opposed to each other, the newspaper thinks the chances of success for Egypt, the U.S. and Israel are very slim, and that their meeting will be a waste of time, as the French president has recently hinted.

Letter from Cairo

Egyptians want peace, and will get it somehow

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of irregular contributions by former Jordan Times Staff Writer Ian Kellas, who recently left Jordan to return to Britain via Egypt.

CAIRO -- "Fundamentally, you see, the Arah-Israeli conflict is just a side show," the owner of a ramshackle Cairo hotel said as he wiped clean a pair of heavy rimmed spectacles. "Peace treaty?" he went on. "I have no idea if they will sign one or not. It makes no difference. We already have peace." The United States, he explained, has both sides in its pocket and, especially after the events in Iran, is not going to allow another Egyptian-Israeli war.

It is hard to doubt that the Egyptians want peace. "I will be the first one to visit Tel Aviv when they let us," declared Ahmad, manager of a little shop in the old bazzar in Cairo. "This hostility is just a political thing. What do I have against the Israelis?"

Discussing the matter with a medical student from Alexandria as we dangled our feet over the edge of a boat in the middle of Lake Nasser while the sun melted into a spectacular spread of orange water. I suggested that the Arab-Israeli conflict seemed rather more remote here than it does in Amman. "Oh no," he cut in. "There is not one family in Egypt which has not lost a son or a father in the thirty years of war with Israel. In my family two have

But was he not concerned that by pursuing his own particular approach to peace. Sadat was cutting Egypt off from the rest of the Arab countries? Could Egypt get along on its own? "No," Yous-sef replied, "we will always depend on the other Arabs and they will always rely on us." But then he launched into a theme which I heard often: Egypt has made enormous sacrifices for the Arab cause and has got almost nothing in return. So the other Arabs have only themselves to blame if Egypt now looks elsewhere for

Nor are Palestinians conspicuously popular in Egypt. According to Youssry, a petroleum engineer with work in the Red Sea, this is because the Palestinians are responsible for the Arah-Israeli conflict. They are generally seen as being unreasonably hardline. But the Youssry admitted that there could be no peace if the Israelis continued to occupy the West Bank. What about Arab solidarity? "There is no Arab nauou," one man said. "There are Arab peoples." Another-who was unemployed--gave me a lecture lasting nearly two hours about how Egyptians are the only people in the region who really know how to work and have brains. Egypt helped all its Arab neighbours, but now that they are rich they have given almost no

Anyway, I kept hearing, the Egyptians are not Arabs. They are the descendants of the people who huilt the great temples and the

This was a line ably expounded to me by--among others--Mohammad, a teenager from near Cairo, who made his entrance through the window.

That, it seems, is a fairly normal way of boarding a train in Egypt, but it took me a little by surprise. Getting on at a small station before Aswan, I anticipated that the main Cairo train would be full, and so took second class and was quick to bag my seat. But I was careless enough to leave the window a few inches ajar. Before the train had even drawn to a halt in Aswan, no fewer than four persons and several suitcases had landed on top of me. There was then a rather vicious fight for a hit, and everyone got very heated. That turned into a sing-song and everyone got even more heated. By the time things had cooled down (it was a 17-hour journey), it was clear that there were about three layers of passengers over every inch of the carriage--including the people in the luggage rack and the vendors who got on at every station and did amazing traverses over the crush of bodies with travs of merchandise halanced on their heads. As if there were any need to be awakened next morning, we had a loud-voiced cockerel on board as well. He seemed to be part of a small farm that was apparently being transported up the line.

It seemed to me at the time that the railway was rather less a testimony to the special Egyptian genius which Mohammad described than to the urgent need for peace in the country. Peace or at least a bit more money. Coming from Jordan-not the richest of countries in the region-I was still struck by the poverty in Egypt. And also by an air of decay. It may very well be a deceptive air. But the rag-taggle army that is put on public display in Egypt, for instance, did not fill me with much confidence.

It is not surprising that people seem to have an almost unquestioning faith in peace. In three weeks of travel in Egypt I did not meet one person who thought that President Sadar's peace initiative was a bad thing. The general attitude seemed to be that Egyp wanted peace badly and so would eventually get it even if the Israelis didn't want it. But not many people were very clear on how that would happen.

There seemed to he a hint of wishful thinking in the banners spread across all the streets in Aswan (I arrived there a couple of days after the Shah and humped into Gerald Ford) in honour of the President's visit. "Hail to Al Sadat," they read, "champion of war and of peace.'

In Mersa Matrouh on the Mediterranean coast, the nearest sizable town to the Lihyan border, the street banners had a slightly different message--something to the effect of: "May our brother soldiers be victorious." They reminded me of my conversation with the Cairo hotel owner.

Most people told me that President Sadat was very good. 'Nasser, he was crazy, crazy," one man selling Egyptian "antiques" declared. Lots of people said that the Russians were no good, and they usually added that they did not believe in God.

The enthusiasm for Mr. Sadat seemed sincere enough. And it occurred to me--rather unoriginally--after seeing scores of colossal pharaonic statues, that the Egypdans, unlike many other people, probably prefer to admire their leaders. But there were also some middle class people I came across who were more critical.

One admitted that Sadat was greatly preferable to Nasser, but then added that he was losing his common touch. He had taken to his using a helicopter rather than walking as he used to. And instead of insisong on his humble origins, he was now vying to be 'world's best dressed man". Sadat thought he was playing a role on the world stage, but in fact he was just being manipulated by the Americans.

Another I asked about the New Wafd party. At first he did not understand the question. Then he said leaning conspiratorially close in the coffee shop: "The party had one million members and it would have won the next election, if it had not been crushed. But I don't like to discuss politics in this place. You never know who is

con demned

AMMAN, Feb. 20 (JNA)--The Jordan Press Association today condemned attempts by a number of West Bank journalists to form a press association in the Israeli occupied territories.

A statement issued in Amman today said that the proposed association is to be set up under a permit by the Israeli Interior Ministry-a step which extends the ministry's authority over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. "This in itself is a very dangerous phenomenon," the statement added.

"The proposed association is an underhanded attempt which serves Israeli plans to create institutions in the occupied territories connected with the Israeli authorioes hut operating behind an Arab facade," the statement

The Jordan Press Association warned Arab journalists in the West Bank and Gaza Strip against foliate a the "Isrnell manipulated association" and called on those who have joined the association to withdraw from it and to expose its "suspicious motives."

Action must be taken to control inflation no

By Jawad Ahmad

Inflation is an evil, however viewed. It is so because its net effect on the socio-economic system is negative. Despite some gains which may accrue to some inflation-rich people, the loss to the rest of the population is far greater.

The danger of inflation in the less developed countries (LDCs) is aggravated further by the mal-distribution of income which usually exists at the beginning of an inflationary cycle. The distribution worsens, and gloomy expectations fol-

It is always said that inflation is the price which society pays in order to improve the unemployment situation. This is usually the case undernormal conditions. However, what happened in most European. American and Third World countries during the 1974-77 period does not support this allegation. Societies can suffer from both inflacion and unemployment simultaneously.

Jordan was successful, to some degree, in curbing inflation in 1978. According to official sources, the cost of living index jumped by seven per cent only last year.

It is, however, difficult to envisage the same performance during 1979. There are early signs which may push the cost of living index up by more than ten per cent. if not 15 per cent. The situation can worsen unless action is taken immediately to deal with the situation.

Among these signs is the increase, actual and expected, in the international price of certain key commodities. For instance, the prices of iron and copper and cement have already risen, while the prices of oil and other petro-chemical products are expected to increase at insier rates imports these commodities, and the cost inside Jordan is already feet.

AMMAN .- The recent trend towards establishing larger and more expensive industries in Jordan catering for the regional Middle East market is shown clearly in the latest statistics from the Industrial Development Bank (IDB). the leading industry-promoting institution in the country.

By Rami G. Khouri

Special to the Jordan Times

Industrial Development Bank General Manager Ziyad Annab this week released to the Jordan Times an advance copy of the IDB's 1978 annual report, tu be published late next month, lishows that the number of loans approved by the IDB last year declined in absolute numbers for but the total value of hours rose for the second straight year.

This indicates that the trend of the past lour or five years towards. Jordanian industries looking at neighbouring export markels is continuing", Mr. Annah said, "We are seeing the development borrower to of bigger industries, requiring Annab said. bigger investments and more sophistication in the methods of production.'

Last year's figures show the IDB approved 54 loans with a total value of JD 5,147,500 compared with 61 loans worth JD 4,701,800 approved in 1977. But while tewer loans were approved last year thanin the previous year, the average loan in 1978 was worth JD 95,324, while the aver-

Industrial estate planned for Sahab

Activities of Industrial Development Bank reflect emergence of bigger, more sophisticated, capital intensive ventures

This is the first of a three-part series on the activities of the Industrial Development Bank. Tomorrow's article will focus on the bank's Small Scale Industries and Handicrafts Fund. The third article will examine the work of the Jordan Institute of Management, established by the bank last year.

> are tending towards capital intensive ones, which is perhaps parily due to the shortage of labour in certain sectors, though this in turn slightly eases the management burden," Mr. Annab said. The trend towards larger scale industrial investments was also shown in the pioneering move by the IDB last year to put together multi-million-dinar locally syndieated loans for two local companies, a trend that Mr. Annab says will continue. "We will always undertake this sort of activity if there is a chance. We have to go out and shop among the commercial banks for the big credits that we cannot provide ourselves and that individual banks may not be willing to put up the second straight year in a row, abone. Locally syndicated loans are also cheaper for the borrower. because they carry a lower interest rate of around nine per cent instead of the 13 per cent that would be charged internationally. and because local credits in Jordanian dinars do not expose the borrower to currency risks," Mr.

> The IDB has a legal maximum of JD 535,000 that it can lend to any one project. While the average from approved last year was worth JD 95,324, the average duration of loans was seven years. with 12 years the maximum allowed by law, Interest charged on IDB loans is nine per cent, with a maximum grace period of two and a half years.

A breakdown of last year's lending shows that JD 3,878 million was extended to 43 industrial projects, and JD 1.269 million was lent to 11 touristic projects.

A tunher analysis shows that 28 per cent of industrial loans went to fabricate metal products industries (cahles, solar heaters, building materials, washing machines, trial loans went to non-metallic mineral projects, such as cement and bricks production.

Fifteen per cent of loans went to chemical and plastics industries, 14 per cent to paper products companies, and 12 per cent to fond and beverage industries.

Actual disbursed loans last year were only slightly more than the previous year, or JD 3.796 million disbursed in 1978 compared with

Mr. Annab named the identilication and promotion of new industrial projects as an area where more work could be done, "but this is something that we can only acquire with time and experience," he said, noting that most companies that apply for IDB loans have not carried out detailed market studies in their area of such as common maintenance and work. The IDB staff of 60 people. among whom are 42 pro-"It will be almost an entirely fessionals, undertakes its own detailed studies of new industries. which in some cases may take up to a full year to complete. In many cases, there is little or no information about a sector of the economy in which a firm is to be established, thus slowing down the process of evaluating the feasibility of the new business.

In fact, the IDB has started training personnel of other Jordanian banks (notably the Arab Bank) in project analysis, which should he raid the gradual move by commercial banks into the sort of detailed technical and financial analysis of prospective industries that is now carried out almost exclusively by the IDB.

"h's tine with its if the commercial banks and the investment companies start playing the same role that we have been playing. because it will only help to promore more industrial development in the country." Mr. Annah said, though he thought the commercial and investment banks would require more time for their statt to acquire the capabilities required for such project identification and studies.

The Industrial Development Bank was established in 1965 as a joint undertaking by the government and the private sector. The government holds one-third of the paid-up capital, with the remaining two-thirds in the hands of private citizens and institutions.

JORDAN VALLEY AUTHORITY

Village Development Project/ Stage II Invitation for Pregualification

The Jordan Valley Authority, an agency of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, invites submission of pregualification data from U.S. contractors, Jordanian contractors and contractors from countries eligible under AID Geographic Code 941 or joint venture of projects of similar nature and type for the construction of about 30,102 square metres of schools, clinics and municipal buildings distributed throughout villages located along an 80 kilometre stretch of highway that traverses the length of the East Bank of the Jordan River Valley. Temperature in the valley ranges between 7 and 48 degrees Centigrade. Buildings shall consist of monolithic reinforced concrete foundations, columns and roof with 20 centimetre hollow concrete block walls. The project shall consist of the following buildings: 23 schools ranging trom approximately 273 to 1480 square metres or approximately 20,475 square metres in total classroom space: 13 school administration buildings of approximately 1131 square metres in total area; 13 school toilet facilities of approximately 676 square metres in total area: 4 health centres ranging from approximately 420 to 2250 square metres or approximately 3510 square metres in total space; and 3 municipal facilities with an approximate total area of 4310 square metres. Aggregate, water, cement and reinforcing steel are readily available.

Although it is not required that contractors visit the area, it might be to the advantage of contractors to acquaint themselves with local conditions. Plans and specifications are available for review by interested contractors in Amman, Jordan. The JVA will review qualitications of the contractors. The type of contract to be entered into will be stated in the bidding documents when issued to the prequalitied contractors. The project, of which the above described buildings are a part, will be jointly tinanced by the U.S. Agency tor International Development and the Government of Jordan. The contractor to whom a contract may be awarded will be paid in U.S. dollars and Jordanian dinars. In submitting pre-qualification data, AID prequalitication questionnaire for construction contractors (Attachment 2A CH2, HB 11 TM:11:1) must be filled out completely and submitted together with any prochures and additional information on experience and resources. In the event that a joint venture seeks prequalification the questionnaire must be supplied with respect to all firms in the joint venture. These forms are available from the JVA in Amman at USAID and from AID Washington. Completed prequalification data must be submitted

LONDON--The pirates of the recording industry-and millions of people with cassette recommens who would rather pilfer their music than pay for it--have won another round.

The best scientific brains in the record business last month admitted defeat in a two-year search for a "spoiler signal" that would stop home taping.

The British Phonographic Industry Ltd. an organisation financed by the record companies. lost the latest battle--but won't concede the war.

"The research was quite revolutionary," laments BPI's director-general Geoffrey Bridge. "Unfortunately it turned out to be a dead duck.

The plan was to put a signa! on records which would be inaudible when the disc was played but would become a disturbing noise when the contents of the record were transferred to a cassette

"h's a termbly difficult thing," says Mr. Bridge. You can put a signal on but it's just as easy to take it off again. All that's needed is a little gadget for about £10 or less to wipe our the signal.

"It's rather like ballisties--you have a missile and then someone invents an anti-missile and then an anti-anti-missile..."

For BPI's research team at the University of Southampton, the first problem was finding a signal which would not offend the sensitive ears of record buyers. About a quarter of the volunteers who took part in the team's listening tests could hear the signal when a record was played.

"All those who could hear the signal were under 30 and had acute hearing," Mr. Bridge says. "The researchers thought that if they spent a lot more money they might be able to lower that to five per cent of the listeners or even one per cent--but even that would not have been acceptable.

is Abn Dhabi, CCC will run an inspection service, using Smartie, which will be operated by Marine Unit people. Smartie stands for submarine automotic remote television inspection equipment, and its makers say it is a completely new type of microcomputer-controlled withanned inspection system. It was built to work in the poor visibility and hostile conditions of the North Sea.

Elliptical in cross-section, it has a banery of television cameras with at least one low-light silicon-intensified-turget camera and a highresolution vulicon camera. Smartie has no propeller but is driven by an electric pump. It carries us own computer, making it more proverful and versatile than anything in the past and scoring a first for Marine Unit: the first time a microcomputer has been installed on such an underwater vehicle. This not only interprets control signals from the operator and controls speed and direction, but also makes the submersible easier to operate. Even when the vessel is passing through an area of zero visibility, it can, in a sense, still see: the computer accepts information from the magnetic compass and gyro and projects an artificial information "turget". And if it is in a strong current it can compensate, and hold itself still. The cable that controls it is less than half a centimetre thick. This carries all the instructions, and feeds back the video signal to his sereen. The makers point out that most numanned submersibles have bulky, multi-core cables which affect performance. Smartle is not for sale at present: Marine Unit will use it to offer a complete inspection service to the offchore industry. One is to be kept available for nee anywhere in the world. It would be flown to wherever there was an underwater emergency, together with a generator, operator's console, cable--and three operators. Another will be urailable for longterm comments with a winch and lanneher to withstand rough seas. Two units will be available by the end of July, with more in follow, all made in Marine Unit Group's new factory in Plymouth, wonthern England. The chairman of the group, Mr. Cr Corder, describes Smartie as a realistic lowcost alternative to the diver, even in shallow water. "Its operator actually sees more on his screen than the diver sees on the sea-bed." he said. "And it can operate in more huzardous conditions than a diver can: (LPS)

BPI, flummoxed in its latest scientific skirmish against the forces of evil, has also turned to legal tactics. It is seeking to have a tax imposed nn the sale of recording equipment and blank tapes. Profits would go to everyone who loses money to the pirates: composers, performers, publishers, artists, record producers and, of course, the record companies.

Fervent home tapist Tony Eaton of London has little sympathy for the plight of the recording industry. "One of their big public relations problems is that the companies that are complaining are all very rich," he says. "The police don't have time for them--and rightly so, If it's pirate tapes or rape, they're going to go for the rapist.

Tony is pleased with the quality of the hundreds of tapes he has pirated in the privacy of his own home. "The average equipment being sold today is more than good enough to make it worthwhile for all but true hi-fi enthusiasts to tape from records," he says. "Bot somebody at some stage still has to buy the record."

The assembly of the "Venera" intraplanetary station.

takes MOSCOW-Another step in the exploration of Venus has been made by Soviet science and technology. On December 21.1978 the "Venera-12" a 98 day intraplanetary probe covered a distance of over 240 million kilometres and reached the vicinity of the planet. The landing craft landed softly and for 110 minutes has been broadcasting scientific information from the planet's surface. The "Venera-12" probe flew past the planet Venus at 35 thousand kilometres and continued its flight in space. The "Venera-11" automatic station, analogous in design and purpose to the "Venera-12" station, reached the vicinity of planet Venus on December 25 and its landing craft softlanded oo the Venus surface some 800 kilometres

Afghanistan denies blame for death of U.S. ambassador

KABUL, Feb. 20 (R)--Afghan Foreign Minister Hafizullah Amin yesterday categorically rejected suggestions that his government was to blame for the death of American Ambassador Adolph Dubs in a kidnap drama in Kabul last week.

He said he considered an American protest over their handling of the incident to be completely baseless.

Mr. Amin went into considerable detail with his first public statement on the incident. Mr. Dubs. a 58-year-old career diplomat, was cut down in a hail of gunfire when Afghan security forces stormed the hotel room where he was being held by four armed kidnappers.

The minister said he hoped it would not adversely affect U.S.-Afghan relations but at the same time he was strongly critical of the American version of events.

Mr. Amin said the Afghan Government had taken every possible measure to save Mr. Dubs' life and all their efforts had been directed at freeing him unharmed.

Mr. Amin said that as deputy prime minister he had been given progress reports throughout the drama at the Kabul hotel and

Mr. Amin said he had been at the House of the People, the palace of former Afghan rulers which is close to the Kabul hotel, and later at the Defence and Interior Ministries. No anempt was made to reach him up to 12.15 p.m., he said. The ambassador died about 35 minutes later.

Embassy officials here say that one of their officers was turned away from the gates of the House of the People when he went there in search of the foreign minister after repeated attempts to contact him on the phone. They were 17ying to relay a personal appeal from Secretary of State Cyrus Vance that no precipitate action should be taken that could endanger the

Their only hope of success would be a decision by the Socialist Party to abstain during a vote of confidence for Mr. Andreotti's present minority christian democratic government or a new Piccoli cabinet including smaller parties.

The sources said the socialists might decide to take this action to prevent early general elections before the scheduled European Parliament election in June.

The socialists are hoping to score gains over the communists in the June election by campaigning as representatives of the noncommunist European left with the help of West European socialist

AFL-CIO attacks Carter's policies

The executive of the American Federation of Labour. Congress of Industrial Organisations (AFL-CIO) is holding its annual winter meeting here and its presideni. George Meany, has often been at odds with the Carter administration. A statement issued by the executive said Mr. Carter's antiinflation programme would not succeed, and increases in the federal budget would lead to a renewed risk of recession.

At a press conference, Mr. Meany glso hit out at President Carter's attitude towards events in Iran. He said the administration had been too quick to recognise the new government set up by Avatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, and instead should have adopted a wait and see" attitude.

Mr. Meany, asked to evaluate Mr. Carter's foreign policy, said: I don't know what his foreign policy is. Our foreign policy seems to be that we react to events. Something happens and then we have something to say about it. Mr. Meany proposed that America should try to base its future on oil supplies other than those from Iran. He added: "I don't think we can depend on Khomeini and what may happen after Khomeini."

Intersindical, however, still maintains its control over 120 unions which together represent 1.6 million workers, out of an estimated total workforce of 3.4 million.

The essential difference between the two rival trade unions remains one of quality rather than quantity. UGT influence has so far been restricted to the white collar unions. It has failed to penetrate the powerful industrial unions.

Indications are that the UGT will not find the going easy. Moulded by the experience of revolution, the Portuguese industrial worker has arguably achieved greater degree of political awareness than most of his European counterparts. Now, with unemployment rising and real wages falling as a consequence of the government's stabilisation programme, he is being asked to join a moderate trade union organisation that is publicly committed to getting the Portuguese worker off the street and back around the negotiating table. The UGT also has to face the well-organised propaganda machine of the Portuguese Communist Party. Accusations that the UGT is being flooded with "imperialist" money from such organisations as the CIA and the Portuguese Confederation of Employers is not falling on deaf ears and is creating a psychological barrier which will not be easily broken down.

Finally, given the unpredictable tear apart the UGT as easily as they once put it together.

Winds of change for Portugal's labour movement?

The new Portuguese trade union organisation formed to contest the Communist grip on the labour movement has had remarkable success in its first four months. But the opposition is powerful, and the UGT's existence is still fragile.

By Jimmy Burns

Lisbon has a tendency to retain on its walls the fading slogans and tattered posters of yesterday, perhaps as a reminder of a more energetic political past. It was thus with some surprise that Lisbonites woke up one morning early last autumn to find the same walls covered by hundreds of crisp new posters with a quality and a message rarely seen in the four years since the revolution.

"Joint the UGT" was the simple inscription, spelt out in bold white type over picture of two arms joined by a handshake.

Exactly who or what the UGT was, few Lisbonites really knew then. Some of them may have recalled that the formation of a new trade union had been announced some days before by a small group of nondescript office workers in one of Lisbon's mote

Recently the UGT, or General Union of Workers, held its first congress in Oporto, the capital of northern Portugal. The congress was attended by nearly 1,000 delegates, including representatives from most of the major European trade unions, and the leaders of Portugal's main political parties, with the excep-

The meteoric rise of the UGT during the last four months is undoubtedly one of the more fascinating developments in Portugal's recent political life. Whether the strength of this non-Communist trade union grouping, the first to seriously threaten the Communist Party's control of the Portuguese labour movement since the revolution, is more apparent than real has become a subject for stormy public debate and for no small measure of international interest. The creation of non-Communist trade unions became a matter for increasing concern for a wide political spectrum in Portugal once the Communist-controlled General Confederation of Workers (CGT-Intersindical) appropriated both the structures and influence of the old "sindicatos". These had been one of the main props of the Salazarist corporate state until their power was gradually eroded in the last years of the half century dic-

As the regime crumbled. Communist leaders were at the forefront of industrial action. When a left-wing military coup finally suc-ceeded in April 1974, the same union leaders joined hands with the soldiers and demanded compensation for their effort. Recognition of Intersindical as Porrugal's main trade union body was enacted in a law within the year, Significantly, though, the law did not define Intersindical as the only trade union organisation to which each individual union should affiliate. An important article specified that no closed shop could be imposed, and the decision of whether or not to affiliate was left up to each union. These loopholes in the law of "unicidade" had precisely the effect that the Communist Party had feared: it strengthened those forces in individual unions likely to be opposed to any centralised body dominated by the party. Equally, it encouraged the resolve of Portugal's recently created political parties to make their first inroads into the Portuguese labour movement. Concensus has hardly been the dominating note of Portuguese claim that their organisation now policies in the last three years, and encompasses over 40 individual the lack of agreement among the unions which together represent non-Communist political parties has undoubtedly been the single most important factor acting joined UGT in an individual against a more speedy creation of a viable alternative trade union capacity. organisation.

The first attempt by the Socialists to establish a "democratic" trade union body late in 1977, for example, was stillborn following a row at union level with the influential Social Democrat Party (PSD). At that time neither the PSD nor the Christian Democrats could believe that the Socialists were really prepared to pull away from their previous flirtations with intersindical.

Against this background it is easier to understand where the significance of UGT really lies. The trade union organisation is the brainchild of former Socialist Labour Minister Maldonado Gonelha, who has consistently argued within his party against a 'go-it-alone" attitude regarding union matters. In the light of previous failures, Mr. Gonelha formed the opinion more than a year ago that no alternative to the Communist domination of the labour movement could survive unless it cut across party lines and incorporated Portuguese workers under a common "democratic"

Mr. Gonelha is now convinced that this has been achieved. The UGT was officially founded in October as a predominantly Socialist trade union. It has taken four months for Mr. Gonelha to draw both the Social Democrats and Christian Democrats into a more open collaboration. The alliance was symbolised by the presence at the recent congress of Socialist leader Mario Soares and his political rival, Social Democrat leader Francisco sa Carneiro, Not so clear, however, is whether, having laid the basis for a new cooperation among the political parties, the UGT will now build itself into a sufficiently strong force to counterbalance Intersindical. UGT union leaders course of Portuguese politics, it is anybody's guess as 10 how long Mr. Gonelha's "grand alliance" will last. With a general election due in a year from now, the nagging suspicion exists that the ambitions of politicians could one day
